When I started my MBA journey I knew if I want to continue in this field (HSE and Sustainability) I have to be at the core where the applications of HSE and Sustainability comes into picture. During my MBA I have had always wanted to work in the secondary sector of the country where one could directly contribute to the country's growth. Hence, working with a metal and mining giant is a dream come true. The business sustainability sector in India is still emerging and expanding as compared to several countries hence choices might be limited but once into the sector the opportunities to contribute are plenty. Being in the sector you will not only contribute to company's growth and brand but also your role will enhance safe operating environment along with production hence saving valuable lives. In a corporate world, Sustainability Management is not just Environment or climate change. Sustainability Management is an umbrella under which Occupational Health, Safety/Safe Operations, Environment, Investors Relations, Technology innovation for efficient operations, Contractor and Employee management, Social Performance and CSR are responsibility of a company. The courses at the XSoS are extremely important to drive you to your goal. Once you find your goal stick to it strive towards it no matter what happens. XSoS chooses a small bandwidth of students each year hence it is convenient to collaborate with the professors and deep dive into the areas which are of your interests. Every place has positive and negative situations taking the positive outcomes with me and brushing aside the negative outcomes are my key take away which is a important practice to grow professionally and personally. Being at XSoS, was one of the most cherished memory for me. I can say XSoS contributed to my professional and personal growth. The faculty at XSoS are the best in the field. I owe a lot to them especially Tamoghna Sir, Sutapa Ma'am and Arup Sir. Their courses and presentations inspired me to give my best. Irrespective of what we want to achieve in future, passion is key in nurturing our growth. Lastly, I would say opting for Sustainability Management without a purpose and goal is a risk. If a purpose and goal is in your vision, then exploring Sustainability Management will be a worthy career journey. Sustainability Management is not a mainstream course, it's more than that as the Present and Future both await your passion. Thanks.
